Friday:—

Precious Hubby:—

Well, dear heart, Friday again, and because of its usual rush for me, you are going to get the usual short Friday letter. I am writing this in the morning to be sure that you get it. As you, no doubt, noticed on the envelope, I received your letter yesterday, just as I was about to post you mine.

I will write you about the furniture when I write you the big letter. But one thing, honey, under no circumstances get a brass bed. Heavens! That is the very worst thing. I simply hate them!

Except for a slight headache, I am feeling fine. How, love, are you feeling? Fine, I hope, and so have, love, take care of yourself. Mom dear, is feeling fine, — I shall see her to-night.

Rose told me to-day that Mom says its a good thing you are married to me, so that at least, indirectly she hears from you. Rose promised you a heart of a letter, and no amount of excuses from me as to how busy you are etc. appeased her. So dear, you know what to expect — sort of preparing you for the shock. I told her to go easy as you are my hubby — but I don't think that had much effect. Poor little Henry has a sore throat which gave him a fever. Mom used ~~alcohol~~ alcohol for his head. She told Mom, "that it was a good thing you were married to me" - cause he can have the alcohol. So all around, dear, see how fortunate you are. He sure is some kid!

Lost, put in your application for the "60" immediately. Jy is sending a copy of his discharge papers to the authorities. See it. Lost, "60" & "60" looked for another check, but guess I lost my pull, nothing so far this month.

So, dear heart, this was supposed to be a short letter, and in order to keep my promise I'll have to stop right now. With all my love, hugs & kisses,

Your little wifie
Frances.

Am dying with curiosity to know what you are saving for the big letter. Can't you even hint me what's it about? Mean!

Enclosed you will find the chopping about the furniture, which I think good value.
